A banker or money loaner would said to be the thing twenty or thirty have to satisfy himself of the exist years ago among them, but they keep up their end pretty well on the things they've got to have, such as responsi-ble watches, fancy lanterns and natty punches. When a conductor is ap-pointed on a road he is given a punch and a lantern by the compony. The punch is a plain one, merely differing in the sort of hole it makes in a ticket an insurance on the articles he is hold from those the other conductors on the line are supplied with, and the lantern is a plain tin thing, worth 50 or 75 cents. Neither do they consider the circumstance that so often happens that nearly all articles of general merchandise rise or fall as the price of leading farm products does. Many do not take into consideration the fact that the money they have received for their crops has been employed to stop the payment of interest, or has been invested in something that has advanced in price more than the articles they disposed of. Neither do they they disposed of. Neither do they after a spree that cost him $400, a placard stared him in the face from his bedroom wall, "Rum Did It;" and have sustained by ahrinkage, damage by unfavorable weather, and destruction by insects and small animals. They put no estimate on the comforts they have enjoyed by the use of the money they realized by the sale of their crops, on enjoyed by the use of the money they realized by the sale of their crops, on the pleasure of having the store bills paid at the time they were due, and the consciousness of having paid the hired help what was their due. They simply render themselves uncomfortable by thinking that some rich specu-lator has made a little money by buy-ing and holding what they had to sell.

They often render others exceedingly unhappy by talking about what they are pleased to call their loss.
